Tools for Successful RELATIONSHIPS

The art of maintaining successful relationships is an ancient and profound one. An art a few of us have been taught. Based on Hindu philosophy and mysticism this workshop shares with you the tools and principles that help make a relationship successful whether it be a friend, business partner or life partner.

Among the topics explored are:

- The golden rule
- Accepting your partner
- The art of listening
- Being happy by making your partner happy
- Making plans as a couple
- The mystical rule
- and more!

Presenter

Hindu priest and meditation teacher, Dandapani lived for 10-years as a monastic at Kauai's Hindu Monastery in Hawaii, USA, studying and practising the ancient Hindu yogic teachings that focus on the use of meditation, yoga, and worship of God as the keys to unfolding a person's deepest potential through personal self-effort. Dandapani currently resides in New York City and conducts workshops and spiritual adventures in the US and abroad. See website for the upcoming spiritual adventure to the Himalayas (Nepal and North India) in October 2010.

"I want to thank you for your very insightful and enriching seminar held here in San Diego at that lovely location. Your way of expressing complex relationships and emotions in simple terms is extremely helpful. Of course it can apply to my own life but I also work with refugees through the IRC International Rescue Committee. Most of these people have experienced trauma. Your way of describing life experiences having an emotional component connected to it made it tangible and understandable. Not only for myself, but it gave me tools to help communicate with the people I work with. Thank you."
